SUBJECT: Overview of FY 83 International Security and Economic Cooperation Program

Attached is Secretary Haig's formal overview of foreign assistance. I believe it is an important step forward in explaining to Congress and the American people the relationship of foreign assistance to the conduct of foreign policy.

Beginning this year, we no longer propose simply to catalogue the importance of a few countries as the justification for our resources request. In the overview, we identify policy parameters that are critical to our international political, security, and economic objectives, and link our total foreign assistance request to the achievement of those objectives.

We face stiff questioning this year on the levels and the rationale behind our request. With the overview, we have set out, more clearly than in the past, the President's program of international security and economic cooperation.

I would like to thank all of you for your support in this important endeavor to date and look forward to, and indeed will depend on, your continued cooperation in the future.
